MWU Impact in Arizona

Local Presence:
Midwestern University’s presence in Glendale has created nearly 700 campus-based jobs and has linked more than 6,000 healthcare professionals from around the United States to Glendale as clinical faculty members. The University has invested over $369 million in Glendale and is the home of Arizona’s largest medical school and the state’s only veterinary college. Midwestern University has been ranked as one of the top ten places to work in academia by The Scientist magazine and is consistently honored as one of Arizona’s healthiest employers by The Phoenix Business Journal.

Community Service:
Midwestern University faculty and students are actively engaged in community service through University-sponsored events, alliances with healthcare organizations such as the American Diabetes Association, and work study programs. Midwestern students and employees provide nearly 10,000 hours of community service annually (with an equivalent monetary value of over $1.4 million) by participating in a wide variety of outreach programs, health screenings, and education throughout the state, and offering expert advice through the Midwestern University Community Health Lecture Series.

Arizona Healthcare Impact:
In addition to rural residency programs around Arizona, Midwestern’s Osteopathic Postdoctoral Training Institution (OPTI) program has established new residency programs in Maricopa County in conjunction with partners such as John C. Lincoln Healthcare and Mountain Vista Medical Center, as well as created residency opportunities at its own Midwestern University Clinics in Glendale. As of October 2014, more than 7,000 healthcare professionals have graduated from all of Midwestern’s programs, with over 40% remaining in Arizona to practice, helping to address critical shortages in family medicine statewide.
