Midwestern University Local Impact

Local Impact: Midwestern University is home to Arizona's largest medical school and the state's first veterinary college. As of September 2025, over 18,000 healthcare professionals have graduated from all of Midwestern's programs, with 42% remaining in Arizona to practice, helping to address critical shortages statewide.

Economic Impact: According to a survey by Applied Economics, the University has an economic impact of $767 million in Maricopa County and has created nearly 1000 campus-based jobs.

Community Service: Midwestern University faculty and students are actively engaged in community service through University-sponsored events, alliances with healthcare organizations such as the American Diabetes Association, and work study programs. Midwestern students and employees provide over 10,000 hours of community service annually through outreach programs, health screenings, and education throughout the state.
